DIRECTOR'S NOTES

I was eighteen when I first read Our Town. It was a shocking experience for me. I was at the height of my glory as a senior in high school ready to enter into the pleasant world of college. Everyday passed swiftly and peacefully. I had few deep thoughts about anything except how I would amuse myself that day. When reading the play, I identified closely with the characters of Grovers Corners, who lived similar lives to mine — happy and uneventful. When the action of the play suddenly switched from the ultimate glory of marriage (finding the perfect mate) to the sadness of a funeral I was suprised and bothered. I had experienced no deaths in my family and when it occurred in the play, I became aware for the first time of my own frailty. I was a little panicked and very depressed. Over the next few days, I felt bad, I lost a great deal of innocence, survived, and was changed. Soon I began to realize I couldn't quite let time pass without being aware of the pleasure of living. The message of Our Town began to emerge and I understood the greatness of Thornton Wilder's writing and the power of theatre to effect people to be more aware of joy in their lives and to respect the happiness and the rights of others.

It is my hope that this production has the power to change some lives always for the better and deeper and to stimulate others to enjoy more fully the richness that is around them every moment of everyday.

Chris Curran

SPECIAL NEWS
